LOCATION

HISTORY - THE ONE TUN EST.1759

Charles Dickens was a patron of the One Tun between 1833 and 1838 when the pub had already been in existence for over half a century and was mentioned in his book "Oliver Twist" under the fictional name of "The Three Cripples".

'A man in a velveteen coat,' Charles Dickens tells us, '[sits in the] parlour of a low publichouse...[with]...a small glass, strongly impregnated with the smell of liquor'. The novel is Oliver Twist, the 'public-house' is The Three Cripples and the drinker is Bill Sykes. There's some debate upon which pub The Three Cripples is based. Some suggest the One Tun was the original of The Three Cripples. In fact the 'The Three Cripples' pub mentioned in the novel was a lodging house, and never did hold a licence to sell ale. Sited at 124 Saffron Hill it was supposedly next door to the One Tun. A well known Jewish fence called Ikey Solomons who frequented the area at that time was the model for the character of Fagin.

The One Tun started trading on this site as a licensed ale house in 1759, and has always traded under the same inn sign. The present pub is one of two remaining London taverns to trade under the sign of The One Tun, a name which portrays the largest of the range of casks used for beer and wine storage, its capacity being four hogsheads or 252 gallons.

Saffron Hill, in which the pub stands derives its name from the crops of saffron that used to be grown here in the 18th century. The present day pub was rebuilt in 1875 and bears that date on its frontage accompanied by the initials A.E.
